

Anne of Cleves

Anne Cleves was Henry VIII's fourth wife.

Three years after the death of Jane Seymour, Henry was ready to marry again. He was looking for an attractive young woman. Anne Cleves from Germany was suggested to him so he sent his court painter to create a portrait of her.

However, after the couple married, Henry disapproved of Anne's appearance and divorced her after six months. He even called her ugly. Since she didn't make fuss about the divorce, she received the title of "The King's Sister" and was given castle.
